Program Notes

Preludetude: An Etude with its Prelude: Dr. Hal Campbell, retired professor of music at Southern Utah University, Cedar City, Utah, has enjoyed composing pieces that had as their core some folk melody relating to his genealogical background that includes ancestors in England, Wales, Scotland, France, and Germany. But he also is very grateful that his Campbell progenitors took active part in the Revolutionary War as American citizens. Shortly after the 9/11 terrorist event in 2002 Hal was asked by Peter Vinograde to compose some piece that he could add to a recital for the year. Hal selected two American songs of the Revolutionary period: "Johnny Has Gone for a Soldier," and "Yankee Doodle" as a patriotic duo--the one with a serious text of a girl lamenting her sweetheart called to be a soldier; the other, of course, a tongue-in-cheek sarcastic song probably originating with the British, poking fun at the "backwoods" Americans, and adopted and added to whole-heartedly by the Americans themselves. He called the two combined, Preludetude, the first a rather somber unsettling prelude, a forerunner to the second racetrack "go-get-um" etude.
